Biggest Mistakes of Handicapping

Avoid these misguided strategies

Continue

Previously, we examined the four pillars of horse handicapping — speed, pace, track bias and value – on which a foundation of successful horse race betting is based. Aided by a professional horse player who asked that his identity be protected, over the next few months we'll take a closer look at some common handicapping mistakes, a series of misguided strategies and unproven theories that often

Handicapping Mistake #1: It's important to pick winners

Many people are beaten before they ever visit a racetrack, wager at a satellite facility or place a bet online. The reason is that they fall prey to the most common and yet immaterial question asked in a horse wagering setting: "Who do you like?" The far more significant question is, "Who should I bet?"

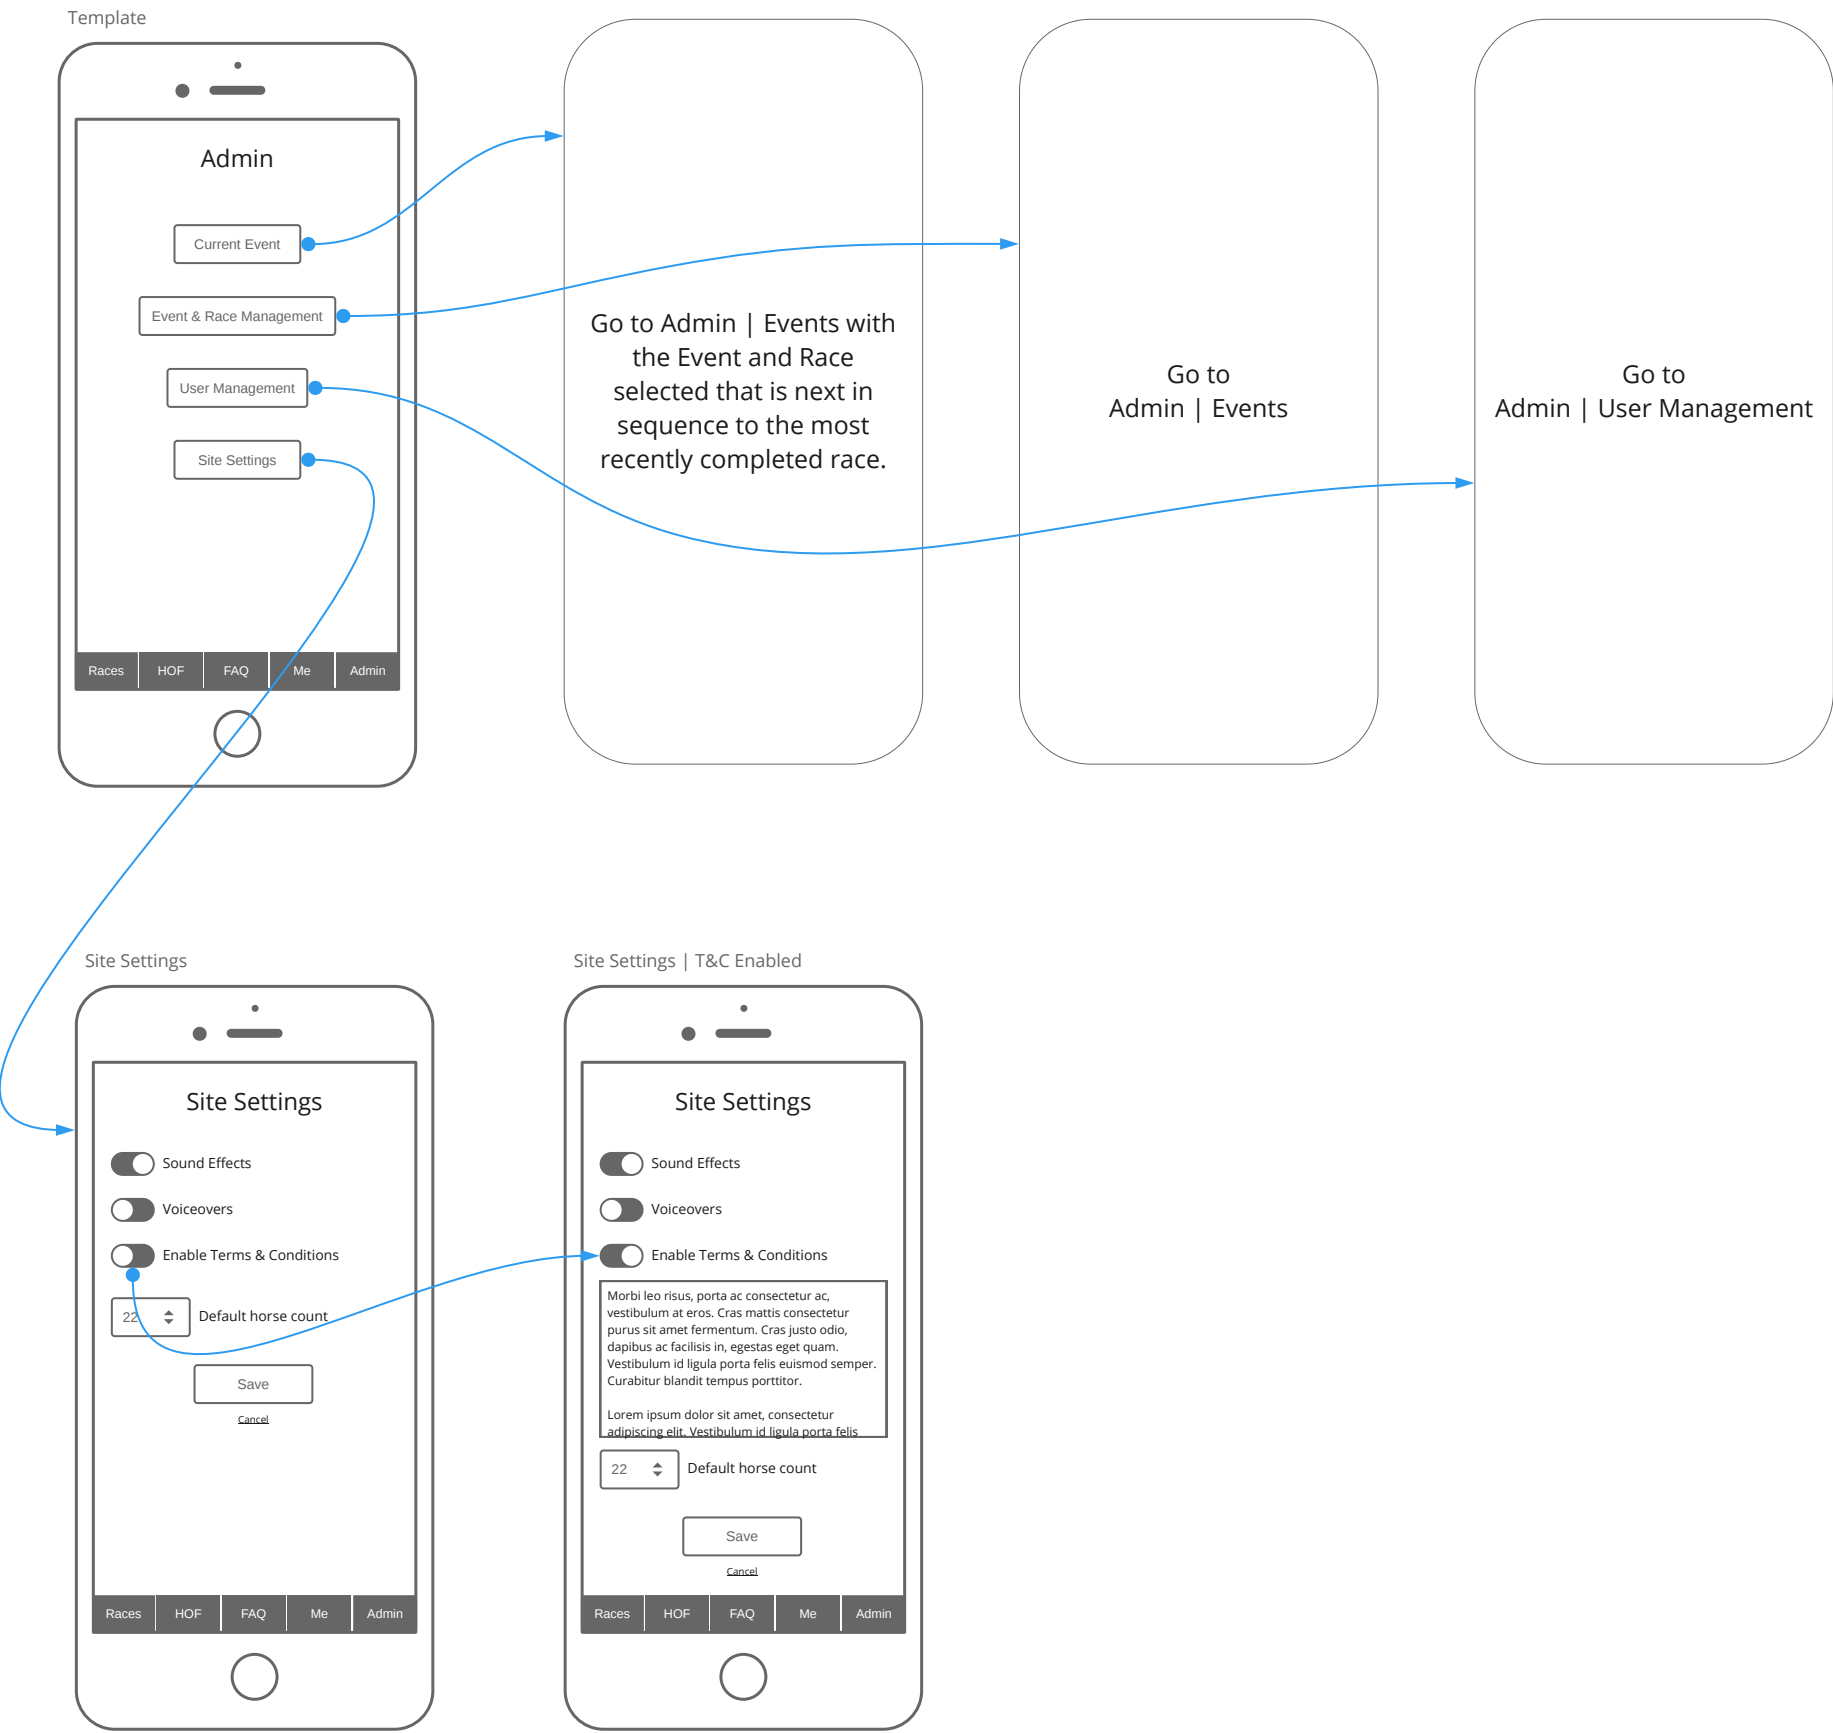

"Actually, picking winners doesn't mean anything," explained a Las Vegas based professional player with an annual income derived from betting horses that reached well

Pay amounts are based off $2 bet new
